1. One reason there isn't as much funding for malaria prevention and treatment is because it is competing with other pressing global health issues, such as the fight against Ebola or polio eradication. Should more attention be given to the malaria fight? Why or why not?
2. If drug resistant malaria emerges from southeast Asia, what impact could it have globally?
3. Malaria causes around half a million deaths every year. Dr. Nicholas White said eradicating malaria would take almost "a military approach" including mass drug administration and border check points. Would the cost and disruption be worth eradication?
