

General questions

1. What problems can you identify in this story? Are solutions presented?
2. In what way might this story be relevant in your community?

Further exploration

1. India's government says the new laws will allow for increased agricultural production, but protesters say that will come at the cost of the livelihood of thousands of small-scale farmers. Is there a case to be made for both sides? Why or why not?
2. Gurvinder Singh said, "Whatever you are, you owe it to those seeds that were planted in the soil that allowed you to flourish." For him, that means supporting the community of Indian farmers even though he isn't a farmer and lives in another country. What could that mean for you?
3. Examine the protest methods used by the farmers. Why do you think they used these methods? Do you think they are effective? Why or why not?