Further exploration

1. What could be the long term global impacts of inequitable vaccine distribution?
2. In a country like Uganda, one of the poorest countries in the world, how should lockdowns and other preventative pandemic measures be prioritized when they drive an already poor population even further into poverty?
3. Allana Kemambazi said that Uganda has been failed “by the international community, because we just couldn’t get the vaccines in sufficient amounts that we needed, but also by our own government, which should have taken more measures to strengthen our public health systems.” Is one party more culpable than the other? Why or why not?
